

CONSULTING / ADVISORY PROPOSTAL

DRAFT FOR SCOPE DISCUSSION

Project

Large-scale launch of Gettr in Brazil

Background

Gettr is a social media platform that intends to fill in a gap created by the widespread suppression of conservative voices by Big Tech, starting in the USA but with effect in many other countries around the globe.

Given the current vitality of the conservative movement in Brazil, the country corresponds to nearly 15% of Gettr's usage.

Jason Miller, Gettr's CEO, has plan to set up shop in Brazil and capitalize on the spontaneous growth the platform has seen in the country so far. Although the platform already garners a sizeable usage in the country, it appears that a locally-run operation, along with an appropriate market launch, will accelerate growth in considerable fashion.

Doing business in Brazil has very particular intricacies. In the common vernacular, it is said that "Brazil is not for amateurs," implying that it takes someone with deep knowledge of the culture, the legal system, the politics, the customs and the norms in order to succeed in the country.

The purpose of this consultancy is to offer the necessary guidance for Gettr not only to avoid common pitfalls of the Brazilian business and political landscape, but to help it thrive in and from it.
